Once upon a time there was a unicorn named Elsa. More than anything in the world, Elsa wanted to win a race. But Elsa had a problem. She only had one leg and couldn't walk very fast. All the other unicorns laughed at her. They said, "You can't win a race. You aren't as good as us."
Elsa was sad. Elsa thought she could do it. First she tried to enter a swimming race. She did her best but she didn’t win. She got last place. The other unicorns laughed at her. "You are never ever good at races."
Elsa tried again. She entered a running race. She tried her best. She practiced, but she still didn’t win the race. She got last place again! The other unicorns laughed and laughed and said, “Unicorns with one leg can’t ever win races.”
Elsa was super sad. She cried. Her big sister, Jasmine, found her in her room. Jasmine said, "Don't listen to them." "But I only have one leg. I can't go fast," Elsa said. Jasmine hugged her sister. "I have an idea. Maybe you have to be fast a different way. I know how to build cars. I can teach you to drive one and you can enter a car race. If we practice you will get better and better and maybe even win." Every day after school Elsa and Jasmine worked on their car. After they built the car, they practiced driving it. Every day Elsa got better and better and better.
One day Elsa entered a car race. The other unicorns saw her. They said, “You can’t win this car race. You only have one leg.” Elsa didn’t listen but she felt nervous. Elsa did the race anyways and she won! The other unicorns couldn’t believe it, even though they saw Elsa win.
Elsa lifted up her trophy and told Jasmine, “Thank you for helping me. I love you, big sister.” Elsa learned she can do anything, even if it’s hard. That’s the end of the story!
