Once there were two girls. Their names were Samantha and Sage. Samantha was tall and had light blue eyes. Sage was taller than Samantha and had brown eyes like a jaguar. Samantha was nine years old, while Sage was ten.

They both lived in Hawaii and were kind, fun-loving girls. They became friends after meeting at a local library. The two friends often went to Sunshine Beach in the afternoon.

One gloomy day in the middle of summer, Samantha and Sage were playing at the beach. While Sage was picking coconuts, Samantha said, "I'm bored! Let's hunt for treasure."

Sage replied, "Okay." So, they went into a dark, creepy cave and it smelled like mothballs.

Meanwhile, the clouds outside grew darker and darker. The girls became hungry. Just then, Samantha spotted a pond with fish in it. She wanted to catch them and eat them.

Sage said, "We need to build a fire." Samantha said, "We need to get some sticks for the fire from that wooded area nearby."

"Okay," said Sage, "let's go to those trees. Mmm! The valley smells so good. After a while the two girls returned to the cave for a peaceful nap in the quiet, gray cave by the fire."

The nap turned into a long slumber. The next morning, Sage woke up and realized they were caught in a storm and couldn't get home so they stayed in the cave. As Sage was cooking, Samantha noticed a box. She opened it and found a flashlight and a map. She carefully read it and told Sage to come with her and they went off to find treasure.

On the way they found something strange. There was a door in the cave and it took them to a new cave. Suddenly, Sage heard a noise inside and saw an owl. She picked it up and named it Nick. They went on ahead to the cave exit and began to run until they came to Samantha's house.

The girls went inside and told their parents about Nick and showed them the gold they also found. Both families went to the beach to talk more about the adventure.
