7:30PM Visionaries, The - Guardians of the Forest

NCI - Twenty-five years ago, as Ivan Gayler flew over the Amazon with his daughter, he saw rainforest burning. Entire sections of lush forest had been torched, cut down and cleared away for timber, agriculture, and oil. The sight brought him to tears: one of the world's last great ecosystems was disappearing before his eyes. At that moment Ivan decided to act. "If not me, then who?" he asked himself. Nature and Culture International was born of that question. "If not me, then who?" It was created from one man's determination to make a difference for the planet. But the organization grew and succeeded from another of Ivan's insights: local and indigenous people are key to conservation success. Conservation must come from and support the local people who depend on these forests and the resources they provide. Twenty years later, Nature and Culture has protected more than 15 million acres of tropical forests and biodiverse ecosystems in South America and Mexico. These forests conserve countless plant and animal species. They provide clean drinking water for millions of people. They preserve the home and cultural traditions of indigenous peoples. And they help mitigate climate change. The Amazon alone stores and sequesters more carbon than any other ecosystem in the world. (Next Air 08/03/2019 05:30PM)

Desire Street Ministries - Privilege has become one of those loaded words that we need to reclaim so we can use it to do some good. At Desire Street Ministries, Danny Wuerffel, a former college and professional football player and Heisman winner, is using his platform to address systemic injustices that have existed in this country for centuries. Wuerffel knows that inequities in the schools, in health care, in our criminal justice system won't change unless privileged people like himself speak out and use their social capital to give others a chance. At Desire Street Ministries, Wuerffel and his staff support ministry leaders in under-resourced neighborhoods in states across the South. Statistics show that most leaders in underserved neighborhoods burn out in five years, so Desire Street walks alongside these people, encouraging them to thrive for the long run. "Most people overestimate what they can do in a year or two," says Dr. Anthony Gordon, Desire Street's Senior Ministry Leader. "And they underestimate what they can do in 10 or 20." Desire Street will be there for as long as it takes. (Next Air 08/10/2019 05:30PM)

7:30PM Visionaries, The - Creating Communities

Bridge Disability Ministries - Inclusion has become a buzzword among disability rights advocates. But what does it mean? We can install all the wheelchair ramps we want, but until we truly embrace the idea of diversity to include different abilities, nothing will change. Until we approach people with disabilities with curiosity instead of fear, they will continue to be marginalized. And what better place to start this fundamental shift than in church? Bridge Disability Ministries in Seattle, Washington, works to build bridges between people with disabilities and their faith communities. Their equipment ministry helps get people to religious services by providing wheelchairs and other types of medical equipment, while their guardianship program protects people who don't have the capacity to advocate for themselves. Perhaps most innovative, Bridge partners with local churches to make places of worship more welcoming for everyone. Native Hope Storytelling has always been an essential means of transferring and understanding culture. Even now, although the mediums continue to change, stories are how we define the truth about ourselves individually and collectively. This truth is especially evident in Native American communities where for centuries, stories were and continue to be passed through the generations orally. In Chamberlain, South Dakota, an organization called Native Hope is embodying that spirit by using video to capture and amplify the unique stories of young Native Americans across the continent. Their hope is that the power of story can offer a kind of cathartic healing from the social and economic ailments that many Native Americans experience today. (Next Air 08/17/2019 05:30PM)

They realize that what happens after they leave is just as important as what they do while they're there. Among the beloved folk groups represented in vintage footage are The Kingston Trio ("Where Have All the Flowers Gone"), The New Christy Minstrels ("Green, Green"), The Limelites ("There's a Meeting Here Tonight"), The Serendipity Singers ("Crooked Little Man") and The Brothers Four ("Green Fields"). In addition, The Highwaymen and The Rooftop Singers present their million-selling number one hits "Michael" and "Walk Right In." Stirring new performances on stage are offered by more folk legends. 7:30PM Visionaries, The - Stories from the Streets

BOSS - White people are less likely to be arrested than African Americans - and they are less likely to go to prison when convicted of the very same crime. Children who grow up in poor neighborhoods are 28 percent less likely to finish high school and close to 100 percent less likely to obtain a college degree. Building Opportunities for Self-Sufficiency - or BOSS - believes that your destiny shouldn't be determined by your zip code or the color of your skin. Based in Berkeley, California, they fight against the root causes of poverty and homelessness to achieve greater social equity for all. Offering emergency shelter, job training, re-entry counseling for ex-offenders, and more, BOSS's work is grounded in the belief that when people are given the right kind of support, they can achieve their goals and exceed expectations. Street Stories - Chris Carlisle is an episcopal priest in the Pioneer Valley of Western Massachusetts, where he worked for years as the university chaplain at University of Massachusetts in Amherst. Being surrounded by young students, who he says have become increasingly dubious of organized religion, imbued him with a bit of skepticism on how the church has chosen to address social issues in the 21st century. Known by many of the locals as "Happy Valley", the area has a reputation for being a haven of liberalism and social acceptance. Despite its reputation, it is one of the most economically divided areas in the country. This truth is often obfuscated by the vibrant downtowns of cities like Amherst and Northampton, but neighboring cities like Holyoke, Greenfield and Springfield have struggled to recover from the exodus of factory workers of the last half century. In this episode, we take a look at what Carlisle calls a "return to the Christianity of Christ" and the work he's been doing to uplift and amplify the stories of the poor in his community and beyond.
