7:30PM Story in the Public Square - Daniel Okrent

In 1924, a new American law ended the wave of immigration to this country that had begun in the 19th century. Motivated by nativism and eugenics, the proponents of this immigration policy read like a who's who of the early 20th century. Daniel Okrent tells the remarkable history of the bigotry and sham science that lay at the heart of the Immigration Act of 1924. (Next Air 04/04/2021 04:30PM)

Although not generally known for its environmental concerns, Las Vegas, thirstiest city in the driest state in the U.S., has been trying to leverage that reputation. It has turned itself into a hub for new and innovative water technology. Everything is watched, measured and checked. Water is recycled and returned to the source. Every drop is monitored acoustically to detect leaks within 6500 miles of pipes. The drought the water bosses were contemplating in 2001 is dragging into its 19th year. Las Vegas and the Valley are at a fine point in their efforts towards sustainability. They have no choice. (Next Air 04/24/2021 08:00PM)

7:30PM One Carbon Footprint at a Time

As discussions of the impact of climate change intensify around the world, many Americans are wondering if changes they make in their everyday lives can make a difference. The short answer, as vividly demonstrated in One Carbon Footprint At A Time, a new half hour documentary from award winning filmmaker Bob Gliner (Schools That Change Communities, Barefoot College) is that they can. As seen through the lens of a diverse range of university and middle school students enthusiastically engaged in a wide range of climate change activities as part of the curriculum at their schools - from analyzing the clothes they choose to buy and wear, to the food they grow and eat, to the energy used to power their cell phones, hair dryers and electricity in their homes, and the jobs and lifestyle changes they make after graduation - everyday actions play a critical and potentially inspirational role in impacting climate change.

7:30PM Earth Focus - Adaptation to Global Water Shortages

Anticipating future water needs, two regions on opposite sides of the world turn to technology for answers. Western Morocco, near the Sahara Desert, is currently facing unprecedented drought and groundwater mismanagement. But an ancient method of gathering moisture from fog is being taught to 13 villages, allowing people to have a level of local control over their most basic need. Central Valley California: The food basket of the world uses nearly 80 percent of the entire state's water supply. Yet there are still close to one million people who don't have access to clean drinking water. Although not generally known for its environmental concerns, Las Vegas, thirstiest city in the driest state in the U.S., has been trying to leverage that reputation. It has turned itself into a hub for new and innovative water technology. Everything is watched, measured and checked. Water is recycled and returned to the source. Every drop is monitored acoustically to detect leaks within 6500 miles of pipes. The drought the water bosses were contemplating in 2001 is dragging into its 19th year. Las Vegas and the Valley are at a fine point in their efforts towards sustainability. They have no choice.

Witness, along with top divers, biologists and shark scientists, a pivotal moment in our understanding of the Great White. Feared, finned, driven to the brink of endangerment, Carcharodon Carcharias reveals long-held secrets. How is a straight-line mid-ocean intercontinental migration possible? Why do "shark walkabouts" happen? Why has mating never been seen? Finicky, elusive, curious, highly intelligent and with electrosensory systems we are only just beginning to understand, the Great White will astound you. Come along for a groundbreaking look at an ancient and amazing creature that has adapted and prospered through two mass extinctions and, today, has only one mortal enemy: us.

7:30PM Stolen Paradise: Water and Power

Repeat of 04/11/2021
03:30PM

The stark landscape of the Eastern Sierras, Mono Lake, and Owens Dry Lake illustrate the consequences of efforts in the early 20th century to move water from the Owens Valley to Los Angeles. Emphasis is on the results of 100 years of water transfers from this region averaging 5-7 inches of rain per annum, and the abiding sense of loss felt by the Paiute-Shoshone people whose ancestors first settled what is now the Owens Valley. Viewers are introduced to locals with unique insight into the grass roots impacts of decisions taken far, far away. This film is relevant to issues of climate change and environmental transformation all over the world.
