7. Contextual Paragraph	Over time Trinidad, Colorado has been a community that has constantly reinvented itself. Whether referred to as a ranch town, an arts town, and architectural gem, or the home to eclectic businesses, the title will fit and people will often nod their head in agreement. The now historic district served as the retail, financial, and cultural hub of Southern Colorado in part because of the development of local coalfields in the late 1800's. Today, Trinidad is diligently collaborating with several partners to create Corazon de Trinidad Creative District to not only bring life to the historic district, but to reinvigorate Trinidad as a whole.
8. Connection to Historic Preservation	Located in the Southern Rockies, near the border of New Mexico, Trinidad's Corazon de Trinidad was designated in 1973 and placed in the National Register of Historic Places. Many of the buildings in Trinidad were created by the Rapp Brothers, prominent architects who worked in Colorado as well as other states. Today, Trinidad is considered to be one of the most intact 19th century cities in Colorado and was listed as a Save America's Treasures project.

There are many significant buildings in the region and Trinidad in particular. The buildings highlighted in this set have significance of their own, but also contribute to the city as a whole. In collaboration with partners across the state and the History Colorado State Historical Fund, many of the buildings in this historic town are being preserved, restored, and rehabilitated. The significance of each building includes:

Temple Aaron: Temple Aaron is significant because it is a visible symbol of the original Jewish Heritage of Colorado and Trinidad, and housed one of the oldest Jewish congregations in Colorado. The building is highly artistic in its architecture and displays brick and sandstone construction with onion top columns and a onion top belfry. The interior retains much of the original architecture as well.

Jaffa Opera House: The Jaffa Opera House is significant for its contribution to the commerce and architecture of Trinidad. It is one of the core buildings in the heart of Trinidad and contributed to the theater business as well as commercial endeavors once the theater closed. Additionally, building is ornate and constructed in a rectangular plan in two stories with a High Victorian Italianate style. The ground floor was originally constructed to house four separate businesses, and over the years has been significantly altered. The theater was located upstairs and housed over 700.

Bloom Mansion: Culturally the Frank G Bloom House reminds us of one of the country's largest cattle operations and the commerce of the Santa Fe Trail. Additionally, the house is eclectic and ornate in the architecture showing Victorian, French, and Rococo elements. It also reflects the time period which often focused on eclectic and exotic décor.
