Parent Guide for KVCR Lessons

Please don’t feel the need for you or your child to do every question in these guides. Pick a question or two that you find interesting and ask your child about it. These questions and activities are to help kids think critically about the program they just watched.

As teachers, we want your child(ren) to have fun interacting with this program. If you and your child discuss the TV show you just watched, what it means, how it helps them and their community, and how it’s relevant to their lives; then we have all done our job.

If you did that with one or two of our questions; great! If you did it with a question your child or you had; that’s great too!

KVCR Lesson Overview

You’ll see each lesson broken down with different kinds of questions. Keep in mind to only choose one to three questions (in total) that will help your kid think about the program they just watched.

- Question Box 1: These are questions that your child will need information from the show to be able to answer. Your child shouldn’t be able to answer a question without having viewed the show.

- Question Box 2: These questions ask your child to think about the TV show and either discuss things that stood out to them, discuss things that your child agrees or disagrees with, or ask what your child might have done in a certain situation.

- Question Box 3: These questions call for the creation of a finished product based on the TV show. Sometimes the finished product it’s touchable, like writing out an answer or drawing, and other times it’s non-touchable, like an idea or understanding that you discuss with your child.

- Question Box 4: These enrichment activities often take things to the “next level” by bringing in concepts from the TV show and your child’s world together. They extend the learning farther.

- Question Box 5: These enrichment activities call upon kids to answer the important questions: So what? Why should I care? How does this matter to me and my world?
