

The dragon and the unicorn

by Lucy Slaughter

Once upon a time, there was a dragon. He was lonely. There were lots of friendly animals, but whenever he tried to say, "Hello," he accidentally shot fire out of his mouth. He burned everything that was around him. When the animals saw the dragon, they thought that he was a mean dragon, but then a very pretty unicorn came along. She looked at the dragon, and she could tell that the dragon was very, very sad and very very lonely. The unicorn wondered why he was so Miserable. Then, she looked around at the things near the dragon; they were all on fire. "Hmmm" said the pretty unicorn. Then the unicorn understood! "I bet that the dragon is lonely," said the very pretty unicorn. Then, she looked up at her magical horn.

“HMMM” said the unicorn.

“I wonder if I could use my magical horn to help the dragon to stop breathing fire.” So, the very pretty unicorn used some of her magic to help the lonely dragon. Then the dragon said, "Hello" without breathing fire! The dragon said, "Thank you" to the very pretty unicorn. The dragon asked if he could be best friends with the unicorn, and the unicorn said, "Yes". So, the dragon was never lonely again. The End.