The Butterfly That Liked Lemonade

Written by Harper Marsh
Illustrated by Harper Marsh
One sunny summer day Haley was outside bouncing her ball in the grass. She got very hot and decided to go inside for a cold drink.
Lemonade was her favorite so Mom made her a nice tall glass. Haley took a big drink. "This is delicious!" She said.
No one noticed that Haley had left the door open. A rainbow butterfly flew in and landed on the edge of the lemonade glass.
The butterfly thought, "This looks really good! So she took a sip. "Yummy! I'll have more." And she drank it all up.
Haley saw what the butterfly had done. Then she started to cry. "My lemonade is gone," she said.
The butterfly felt very bad. She flew to Haley and gently gave her butterfly kisses.
Haley was so surprised that she stopped crying.
After making another glass of lemonade she opened the door, went outside, and put the glass on the ground.
The butterfly followed and began to drink.
That summer whenever Haley was outside the butterfly would return for more lemonade and butterfly kisses.
And the two of them became life-long friends.